Many talk of Robin Hood, who never shot in his Bow.

[This Robin Hood was a famous Robber, and storied to be an expert Archer in the Time of Richard the First, about the Year 1200; his principal Haunt was about Sherwood Forest in Nottinghamshire.] This Proverb is applicable to all ignorant Pretenders and Braggadochio's, either in Knowledge or Business. It intimates, that Bragging and Boasting are common Importunencies in Conversation, equally among Travellers and Soldiers, as well as Poets and Painters, who never out-did Nature yet, but only in the Lye. But they who pretend themselves to be what they are not, will always be prating about what they do not know. So, Non omnes qui Citharam tenent, Citharædæ sunt, sed the Latins; πολλοὶ μὲν τὰρ ἔθνοντο μὲν, καὶ οὐκ ἦν τε Γαῖης, the Greeks; and Multi parlan di Orlando, ubi non videtur mai suo brando, the Italians.

This Proverb is usually applied to such as, having gotten any Thing dishonestly, sell it at a Price much below the Value, according to the Proverb, Lightly come, lightly go; and Robin Hood is alluded to, because, being an expert Archer, and so coming easily by it, he could afford to sell Venison as cheap as Neck Beef; according to the Latin: Aurea pro Æreis; and the Greek, χρυσία χαλκίαι. But others, on the contrary, apply it to such as would buy lumping Pennyworths, still alluding to Robin, but upon another Consideration, viz. his being a Robber; who, though as Cambden calls him Prædonem mitissimum, the most gentle and generous of Thieves, when C. sh. run low, would have what he wanted at his own Rate, which his Chapmen were forced to take, or else he would have it for nothing.

This Proverb is not only levelled at a careless Groom, but has more extended Aim; it intimates, that it is mighty Imprudence to neglect the weighing of all the Circumstances of an Action, both as to Time and Place, before we venture upon doing what perhaps we may repent of in the Event, to our great Shame and Damage. This is generally the Wisdom of the World, when the Thing is over, we are as wise as Experience can make us. Almost all the Misadventures of Mankind are for want of thinking; Afterwit is commonly dear bought, and we pay for it either with Misfortune, Anxiety, or Sorrow; for there is no unthinking a Misfortune, after it has befallen us for want of Precaution and Foresight; an After-thought may enhance our Trouble, but cannot relieve our Distress; it may prevent like Inconvenience for the future, but it cannot make any Satisfaction for what is past. Serrar la Stella quando i'ban perduti buoni, say the Italians. Il est tenu de fermer l'estable quand les Chevaux en sont allés, the French. Quando-quidem accepto clauden's est janua damno, the Latins. One Man had better steal a Horse than another look over the Hedge.

This Proverb does not justify stealing at all; it means very honestly, and is only a smart Turn upon all partial Proceedings, as well in private Judgment as publick Trials. It intimates, that when great Rogues are in Authority, and have the Laws against Oppression and Robbery in their own Hands, little Thieves only go to Pot for it; and that inferior Pirates are punished with Death or the Gallows, while great Offenders live safe and secure under the Helm of Government. This proverb is for doing all People Justice alike, from the Highest to the Lowest, and in all Cases whatsoever, either of Desert or Demerit. We live indeed in a thieving, cheating, and plundering Age; Coxening is become a topping Trade, only we have got a genteler Way of stealing now than only to take a Man's Horse from under him on the Highway, and a little loose Money out of his Pocket; our Raparets are Men of better Breeding and Fashion, and scorn to play at such small Game, they sweep away a noble Estate with one slight Broth, and bid both the Gallows and Horse-pond Desiance; and the Mob is not always just in this Point, for one Pick-pocket deserves a Horse-pond as well as another, without any regard to Quality or fine Cloaths. But, Dat veniam Corvis, vexat Conspira Columbas, say the Latins.

He steals a Goose, and gives the Giblets in Alms.

This Proverb points at such Persons, who by Acts of Injustice, Oppression, and Fraud, amass to themselves large Estates, and think to atone for their Rapine by doing some charitable Acts while they are alive, or when they can no longer possess them, by leaving their Lands in Mortmain to pious and charitable Uses, as building and endowing Hospitals, Almshouses, and other Acts of Beneficence (commendable indeed, when done from a truly Christian Charity); but they who think, by thus paying Paul, to atone for their robbing Peter, entertain an Opinion highly disparaging to the Justice of the Almighty. Parallel to this is the Hebrew Adage,

All the Actions and Enterprises of Mankind labour under the Reflection of this quaint moral Sentence, whether they be prudent or imprudent in the Undertaking, and good or bad in the Accomplishment. It intimates, that there is a great deal of Difficulty in beginning well, and that a false Step at first Start is hardly to be recovered afterwards: that the Work does not cost half so much Trouble as the Design of it; that it is an easy Matter to make Way when the Ice is broke. All is well that ends well.

It is plain Matter of Fact, that the End crowns all Things; and that every Thing is not to be judged amiss that may appear so for the present. A worldly Misfortune, if it quickens our Diligence and Industry; a severe Fit of Sickness, if it promotes our Piety, and makes us amend our Lives, is well; though for the present no Affliction seems joyous, but grievous; for a happy Death is the never-failing Portion of a well-spent Life, which always ends in eternal Bliss and Glory. The best Way of judging of Things beyond Mistake, is by the Issue or Event of them. Finis coronat opus, say the Latins; Ende wobl, alles wobl, say the Germans; and Αλυσσινος, ἄριστος αἰών, say the Greeks.

Though this Proverb contradicts their Notions, who think such Persons only the best Gentlemen, who had the largest Estates, and it being the Custom of England for the eldest Son to go away with the whole Patrimony, it may to them seem a Paradox; but as it is grounded on a different Notion, so there have been, and are plentiful Instances to confirm the Truth of it; for while the Elder Brother of a House, depending upon his Estate, is either indulged by Parents, or gives up himself to an indolent Humour, so that his Soul in his Body, like a Sword in the Scabbard, rusts for want of Use, thinking it sufficient, if he have only the Accomplishments of a Fox-Hunter, or a Court Justice; the Younger Brother being put to his Shifts, having no Inheritance to depend upon, by plying to his Studies hard at Home, and accomplishing himself by Travels abroad, sometimes, either by Arts or Arms, raises himself to a conspicuous Pitch of Honour, and so becomes much the better Gentleman; for it is Manners make a Man, which was the old Motto of William of Wickham, Bishop of Wichester, Founder of the College there, and New College at Oxford, inscribed on the Place of his Founding.

He painted a Bunch of Grapes so to the Life, that the Birds came and peck'd them; and afterwards having painted a Boy holding a Bunch of Grapes, which the Birds also flew to and peck'd, he was angry, and ingenuously confessed that his Work was not complete, in that if he had drawn the Boy as well as he had done the Grapes, the Birds would have been afraid of him. And having disputed with Parrhasius, which was the best painter, Parrhasius painted a Curtain so ingeniously, that Zeuxis taking it for a real one which hid the Antagonist's Work, desired it might be drawn, that he
