PREFACE.

--ccOco--

The great body of Hindú Philosophy is based upon six sets of very concise Aphorisms. Without a commentary the Aphorisms are scarcely intelligible, they being designed not so much to communicate the doctrine of the particular school, as to aid, by the briefest possible suggestions, the memory of him to whom the doctrine shall have been already communicated. To this end they are admirably adapted; and, this being their end, the obscurity, which must needs attach to them in the eyes of the uninstructed, is not chargeable upon them as a fault.

For various reasons it is desirable that there should be an accurate translation of the Aphorisms, with so much of gloss as may be required to render them intelligible. A class of pandits, in the Benares Sanskrit College, having been induced to learn English, it is contemplated that a version of the Aphorisms, brought out in successive portions, shall be submitted to the criticism of these men, and, through them, of other learned Brahmans, so that any errors in the version may have the best chance of being discovered and rectified. The employment of such a version as a class-book is designed to subserve further the attempt to determine accurately the aspect of the philosophical terminology of the East as regards that of the West.

THE MÍMÁNSÁ APHORISMS.

INTRODUCTION.

- a. SALUTATION to the feet of the venerable preceptor I*
- b. Veneration unceasingly be to Jaimini, who removes the defect of vision of the simple by the collyrium-needle of his Institutes which put an end to doubt as to the sense of scripture.
- c. Now a doubt being started as to whether or not Jaimini ought to have undertaken this work, which consists of twelve lectures,—and the prima facie solution of the doubt being as follows—viz.—such a work of disquisition ought not to be undertaken, because a work of disquisition is of no use when Heaven (marga) is obtained by the mere taking of the letters [of the Veda without regard to its sense], Heaven alone being [in this case] to be supposed the fruit, as it is in the case of the sacrifice called viswajii [—mentioned in the 4th canto of the Raghavania—], it being to be expected that there is some fruit attached to the perusal enjoined in the direction 'The Veda is to be perused' [—and Heaven being most probably the fruit when no other fruit is specified;—well, this primd facie solution of the doubt having presented itself,] he declares the established tenet* [in regard to the point, as follows].

The subject proposed.

Aph. 1.—Next, therefore, [O student that hast attained thus far] a desire to know Duty (dharm-ma) [is to be entertained by thee].

- g. 'Next':-i. e. after perusing the scriptures whilst residing with the family of a preceptor.
- ¿. 'Therefore':—i. e. because the fruit of the perusal of the scripture is the knowledge of the sense [of its several passages, without comprehensive apprehension of the import of its teachings—see Lecture on the Vedánta §6]; therefore, in respect of Duty, the definition of which will be stated [in Aph. 2.], "a desire to know"—i. e. an investigation originating in a desire of knowledge—is to be made;— such is the remainder* [required to supply the ellipsis in the aphorism].

c. The state of the case is this, that assuredly the work of disquisition ought to be undertaken, because such a work of disquisition is just subserved by [or has a foundation laid for it in] that knowledge of the sense [of the several passages of scripture, that may be attained by a perusal thereof], and because it is fit that what is effected by a perusal thereof should be a correct understanding of the sense thereof [—instead of Heaven's being attained thereby, as supposed by the speculater in Intro. c.] seeing that it is improper to imagine an unseen reward [of this or that action] when a visible reward is possible;† [—and the understanding of the sense of scripture is a manifest reward of its perusal, whilst the attainment of Heaven by the perusal of scripture is what no one can declare that he has ever found manifested by the senses].

d. As the question will occur-" What is the Duty spoken of, in the expression 'a desire to know Duty', in the preceding

- a. 'Instigatory character' [of the passage]:—this means [that the criterion of Duty is] an expression that moves [or instigates] one† [to do so and so].
- A. 'Is recognised'—i. e. is known thereby;—as fire is recognised by smoke, so that the smoke is the mark whereby fire [though unseen] is known [to be present where the smoke takes its rise]; in like manner an instigatory form of expression is the mark by which we recognise Duty. So Duty is that, the criterion, or the instrument [in the determination], of which, is an instigatory form of expression.‡

d. And by this [mention, Aph. 2., of the mark wherehy Duty is to be recognised], it is moreover suggested that a Duty is not to be apprehended by the senses or by any thing else besides the instigatory character! [of a passage in scripture].

e. But now [some one may ask], "Since, according to [the lexicon called] the Medini Kośa, 'The word dharmma should be masculine when it means merit, but when it means sacrifices, &c., it is held to be neuter,' how is the word dharmma masculine in the aphorism where it means the Agnihotra sacrifice and others [which are recognised as matters of Duty by the instignting promises attached to their performance]?"—if you ask this,—then take [and be content with] as the reason thereof the fact that he [Jaimini] is a great sanctified sages [—and therefore entitled to give the word what gender he pleases. Aph. 4. When a man's organs of sense are rightly applied to something extant, that birth of knowledge [which then takes place] is Perception,—[and this Perception is] not the cause [of our recognizing Duty—see § 8—] because [the organs of sense are adapted only to] the apprehension of what is [then and there] existent [—which an act of Duty is not.]

a. 'When rightly applied to something extant' &c. [That is to say]—when a man's organs of sense are 'rightly applied to', or hrought into contact with, 'something extant', i. e. some object [then and there] existing, what 'birth of knowledge', or of intellection, takes place, is [what we call] Perception:—and such Perception is 'not the cause', i. e. not the producer, of a knowledge of Duty:—that is to say—the organs of sense, which are the means of arriving at the truths of perception, do not [of themselves] enable us to arrive at the truth in respect of Duty.†

5. Of this [—vis. that the senses are not the means of our discerning Duty—] he mentions the reason [—when he says—in § 4—] 'because the apprehension of what is existent'; that is to

Not being an object of sense-perception, Duty is not to be recognised by inference from each perception. c. From its being disproved that the senses are the cause thereof [i. e. of our discerning Duty—] it is to be understood as also disproved that Inference, or Analogy, or Conjecture [see Wilson's Sánkhya Káriká p. 21.—] which owe their birth thereto—having their root in Perception—can be the cause thereof. Therefore it is a settled point that the characteristic of Duty [—or that whereby we are to recognise it—as declared in Aph. 2.—] is the instigation† [of the passage in scripture where some act is mentioned as being calculated to lead to such and such consequences].

The doubt whether the exidence in favour of a Dusty may not be fallacious as sented themselves, since the connection between the two is one devised by man—consisting, as it does, of the conventions which man has devised,—therefore, as sense knowledge wanders away from truth in respect of mother of

Aph. 5.—But the natural connection of a word does not af. with its sense is [the instrument of] the know-fect the evidence of ledge thereof, [i. e. of Duty], and the intimation [of Scripture which is] unerring though given in respect of something imperceptible. This [according to our opinion as well as that] of BADARAYANA [the author of the Vedánta Aphorisms] is the evidence [by means of which we recognise Duty], for it has no respect [to any other evidence—such as that of sense].

The mention of the name of madamayana (or vyasa) in the Aphorism goes to prove that Jaimini's work, the purvea-mindsed, was not antecedent in time to vyasa the author of the sitera-mindsed. Mr. Colebrooke's rendering of the terms purvea and attera by 'prior' and 'later' (—see Essays, vol. 1, pp. 227 and 295—) would seem to have led Dr. Ritter to suppose that have been arguing] is this. The sentence "The mountain is flery", when employed by a man who is defective [in some of his organs of sense], wanders away from the fact [—for the mountain may seem to such a one to be flery when it really is not—]; therefore we require to make use of our senses to ascertain whether credence is due [to the testimony of fallible man]:—but the injunction "He that desireth Paradise should solemnise the Agnithotrs sacrifice" never at any time past present or future is liable thus to wander from the truth; therefore is it, independently of any thing else, the clear evidence of a duty.*

SECTION II.

ON THE ETERNITY OF SOUND.

The validity of Scripture implies the started in the foregoing Aphorisms [No. 5] that the connection between a word and its sense is eternal [—see §5 d.]; and since this is dependent on the eternity of Sound [—seeing that if Sound were not eternal, then words formed of sound could not JAINIUM'S system was the earlier in point of time. He mys, (at p. 376, vol. IV. of his History of Philosophy,—Morrison's version—) that "according to Colebrooks, the adherents of this school may be divided into the earlier and the later",—and then he goes on to speak of "the older and genzine Vedánta":—but in fact the terms 'prior' and 'later' refer to the divisions of the Veds which JAIMINI and VYÁSA respectively expound, the latter confising himself to the Upenishads, or theological sections, which stand last in order.

कर्मको तब इर्शनात् । 📢 ॥

First objection to the starsity of Sound, that it is a product, for in the case of it we see [what constitutes it such].

- a. 'Some say that it is a product, &c':—'Some'—i. e. the followers of the Nyáya—say that Sound is a 'product',—i. e. something not eternal; 'for we see'—i. e. we see an effort made;' in the case of it'—i. e. in the case of Sound; and it is a rule without exception that that is not eternal which effort is concerned in [the existence of].†
- 5. Moreover [the Naiyayikas contend that Sound is not eternal for the following reason]:

श्रक्षानात्। ७।

Second objection, that it is transitory.

Aph. 7.-Because of its transitoriness.

- g. 'Because of its transitoriness'—i. e. because it is not permanent;—or in other words, because, beyond a moment, it is no longer perceived.*
- b. Moreover† [the Naiyáyikas contend that Sound is not eternal for the following reason].

करोतिगदात्। पा

Third objection, that Sound is stemped as factitious by the usage of language.

Aph. 8.—Because [we employ, when speaking of Sound,] the expression 'making.'

- a. That is to say—because we treat it as something not eternal, inasmuch as we talk of making a sound, just as we talk of making a jar.;
- b. And for the following reason also, he mentions, they hold it to be not eternal.§

Fourth objection, that the alleged eternity of Sound is incompatible with its undeniable multerty.

सस्वानारे वैशिपवात्। ८।

Aph. 9.—From its simultaneousness in another person.

- a. [To complete the sentence] it is necessary to supply 'in another place', when we speak of 'another person':—so then, we observe 'aimultaneouaness', i. e. the fact of belonging to one and the same time,—'in another being'—i. e. in the perception of [Sound by] another living creature occupying a different place.

 - § इतो (पानित्य इत्याइ ।
 - । सस्वान्तर इति । देशान्तर इत्यपि पूरवीर्थ । यथा ।

b. The scope [of the objection] is this, viz., the unity of Sound will follow from the very same argument by which, for shortness, its eternity will be established [by the followers of the Mimansa,—supposing the argument to be admitted]; and thus one [numerically single] thing would be simultaneously perceived by [and hence simultaneously in immediate contact—see Nyaya Aphorisms, No. 4—with the sense-organs of] those both near and far;—and this could not be if it were [numerically] one and eternal;—therefore [the Naiyayikas conclude] Sound is not eternal and it is plural.*

c. And for the following reason too [according to the Naiyáyi-kas] it is so [—that Sound is not eternal—], so the author mentions it:—

प्रकृतिविक्तत्वास । ९०।

Fifth objection, that sounds are liable to grammatical inflection.

Aph. 10.—And [the Naiyayikas infer that Sound is not eternal, from the observation] of the original and altered forms [of sounds].

a. What is meant is this,—because it holds universally that that is not eternal the previous condition of which undergoes a change; and in the example dadhyatra [i. e. 'milk—here'] where the original form was dadki strs, there is a change in the shape of the letter y in the room of the original letter i.*

† इताऽपि तथेत्वाइ।

Sixth objection, that Sound present the greater when more are meased in making it.

रहिष कर्गुभूकाचा । ९९ ।

Aph. 11.—And, by a multitude of makers, there is an augmentation of it.

a. For this reason too, it [vis. Sound] is not eternal, that 'an augmentation', i. e. an increase, 'of it', i. e. of Sound, is observed [to be caused], 'by a multitude of makers', i. e. by the numerousness of those who make it. On the other hand, if you assume that human effort is [not the maker but only] the manifester of Sound, [—as a lamp is not the maker of a jar but the manifester of it—making cognisable the jar which previously existed unperceived—then we reply, that,] what is manifested is not seen to be made greater even by a thousand manifesters, as a jar is not made larger by a thousand lamps, [and Sound is made greater by a multitude], therefore [say the Naiyáyikas] the alternative supposition of 'manifestation' [instead of production] will not answer:—such is the import.†:

The refutation of these objec-tions in undertaken.

 The several objections thus alleged against the 'manifestation' view [of Sound's coming to be perceived], he proceeds to refute in their order.*

Aph. 12.—But alike [according to both opini-How for both perons-that of these objectors and of ourselves] is the perception thereof-both agreeing that this is only for a moment, whatever difference of opinion there may be as to Sound itself's being so.]

- s. 'But alike &c.' There requires to be supplied [to complete the aphorism] 'for a moment' and 'according to both opinions.' According to both opinions,—i. e. according to the opinion that it is produced and the opinion that it is manifested,... 'alike,' i. e. without dispute, 'the perception,' i. e. sensation of Sound, is for . a moment, i. e. only for a moment.
- b. Though [so far as this point is concerned] they are alike. vet which of the views is the best? To this question the reply is that the 'manifestation' view is the proper one; so he proceeds to say as follows. ‡

How Sound exists reen when not manifested.

Aph. 13.—Of this [Sound] while it really exists, the non-perception at another time [than that when the sound is perceived] arises from the non-arrival of the manifester at the object.

- s. 'Of this while it really exists' &c. 'While it really exists,'
 —i. e. which is at all times extant [whether perceived or not];—
 'at another time,' i. e. at a time before or after; 'the non-perception,' i. e. the absence of perception, [arises] from non-arrival of the efficient manifester at 'the object,' i. e. at the Sound.*
- b. The import is as follows. Sound is eternal, [as we are constrained to admit] by force of the recognition that 'This is that same letter K' [—vis. the same Sound that I heard yesterday or fifty years ago—, and I recognise it as I might recognise a peak of the perennial Himálaya which I do not suppose to cease to exist when I turn away my eyes from it—], and in virtue of the law of parsimosy† [one of the fundamental laws of philosophising acknowledged by philosophers both of the East and of the West, and implying that we must never assume more causes of a given effect than are sufficient to account for it.].

- b. 'Increase of noise.' From many beaters of drums, or pronouncers of articulate sounds, it is recognised [by the hearers] that 'There is a great sound.' In such a case it is impossible, according to the opinion of our opponents [the Naiyáyikas] to say that portions of Sound, being produced by each of the men [concerned in the making of the noise], produce a great hulk of Sound, like a bulk of cotton [formed out of portions of cotton aggregated], because Sound, according to these opponents, inasmuch as it is a quality, has so parts; [or portions].

c. Therefore,—as there is no arriving [at an explanation otherwise],—when the conjunctions and disjunctions [occasioned by the vibration of the air] take place continually without intermission, arriving from all quarters at the entrance to the hollow of the ear, it [the Sound] seems to be great, and to be made up of parts. What is meant [in Aph. 17] by 'noise' is these conjunctions and disjunctions, and it is just of these that an augmentation takes place* [when a multitude of persons is engaged in rendering Sound manifest].

d. Having thus removed the objections offered by others, he proceeds to state what will establish his own theory.

There is [—we will admit—] a connection between a word and its sense [—a connection, as remarked under Aph. 5. c., in the shape of power, or of God's will that this or that word should convey this or that meaning—]; but it is not the fact that the connection between a collection of words in the shape of a sentence, and the sense of that sentence, is in like manner that of power [—or of God's having pre-arranged that such and such groupes of words should convey such and such a sense]; but the connection is quite a different one, and it is devised by man, and is artificial:
